

David Kapp

"Places, objects and space seen from above or the use of aerial perspective is an unexpected orientation for the viewer. This creates a moment between experience and recognition that is one of the painting's primary subjects..."

—David Kapp

Mary Heebner

"Rivers meander like wild serpents homing towards the sea. Edges where the land and sea meet flux and torque wildly. I imagine I am looking through the lens of a microscope at the world on a cellular level, tides pull away like the stretch marks of mitosis parting and growing. Trees, blown down from a volcanic blast; hair follicles, badlands, no more than the wrinkled knuckles on my hand.

Years of traveling on airplanes, thumbing through atlases, and following maps to explore new lands have inspired my work – real and imagined charts where a spirit can dream and a mind can wander..."

Peter Shire

"I am 56 years old and I have tied my shoes 16,790 times more or less since I was five years old. My friend describes my work as plainly as I see it. 'Peter's work is sort of a collage, a sort of unstable collage of more or less broken geometric volumes, more or less broken mathematical surfaces, and then there are lines crossing everything and there are memories on top.' My sculptures, however, are NOT toys. They are what we think toys are, about seeing things for the first time. Good memories, precarious balance and good luck..."

Scott Katano

"Formally and conceptually my work draws from such current fascinations as Japanese anime, mid-century modern furniture, rave culture, consumer culture, car culture, and the cult of celebrity. My work is about fad, fashion, and style, and examines the allure of and attraction to the surface, the microscopic, the ornamental, the colorful and shiny..."

Stephen Robert Johns

"While sitting in my window seat, inspiration strikes. Quickly, I grab a pen, only to realize my sketchbook is in the overhead compartment. Cities, farmlands and winding rivers are going by too fast. I need paper! Located in front of me are magazines and air sickness bags. I grab a bag and begin to draw..."

"Back in my studio, days, weeks and months after returning home from my travels, drawings on air sickness bags become models for future paintings, retracing my flights and the geometric, aerial views..."

—Stephen Robert Johns

Laddie John Dill

"Laddie John Dill translates nature's larger themes into his works; not just the appearance of land and atmosphere, but visual metaphors for the earth's basics: geology, oceans, the ebb and flow of tides and streams, the telling effects of time..."

—Michael Smith, Curator, Baxter Art Gallery, 1978

"The manipulation of ambient light combined with the lights' interaction on matte and reflective surfaces has prevailed in my work for years. The employment of aircraft aluminum allows the work to capture ambient light and gives the illusion of kinetic energy..."

—Laddie John Dill, April 2004
